TEACHING PHILOSOPHY

I teach from the perspective that the voice and body of an actor is a muscle that you have to train. For example, at the gym you can't go from nothing to all of the sudden lifting 200 lbs, some things take time. Training looks different for everyone and our lesson plans will be curated to your needs and goals!

A lesson is a safe environment to fail forward -- making mistakes and learning more about the anatomy of your own instrument is part of the process.

I help students stretch their vocal skillsets, learn how to tackle the basics of heightened language, and keep their instrument healthy by maintaining a strong technique.

My goal is for students to leave our lessons with sharpened tools and the drive to keep bettering their craft.
